

SELF MURDER

Attempted Early Yesterday Morning

By a Stranger at the Williams House.

C. J. Diver Saved From Suicide by Timely Interference.

Consternation Created on Washington Street by a Naked and Howling Madman.

A man clad only in a gauze undershirt dashed wildly out of the Williams house about 9 o'clock yesterday morning and his horrible yells startled hundreds who were at that time within the vicinity of the postoffice. One man who happened to be almost in front of the Williams house at the time the madman made his appearance started up Washington street at a gait not often recorded by professional sprinters. His speed was continually accelerated by the shrieks of the lunatic behind him. At the corner of Washington and Cortez he of the absent clothing was intercepted by Deputy Sheriff Henry King and a desperate struggle ensued. The officer was unequal in strength to the madman, but he held on pluckily until a score of men within easy reach collected themselves and came to his assistance.

The lunatic was carried howling and struggling to jail and locked up in a cell. He finally settled into a quiescent state which left it possible less hope than might have been gathered from his frenzied condition. Inquiry was made at the Williams house concerning him. Among his effects was found a letter from J. Pagnengray, a well known San Francisco business man, recommending C. J. Diver, to be a young man of excellent habits and well qualified to act as bookkeeper. Nothing else was known of him except that he had been supposed to be a person of culture and certainly was a young man of pleasing address. He is evidently about thirty years of age. It was also learned that a suicide had been narrowly prevented just before Diver made his escape from the building.

Diver came to the Williams house for the first time last Saturday night. Mrs. M. A. McQuinn, the sister of the proprietress to whom he applied for lodgings, observed a strangeness in his manner. She according determined to keep a close watch upon him. He paid for his room in advance but failed to occupy it. On Monday night he returned, engaged another room, paid for it, went away and did not come back that night. Night before last he called again and was assigned to the same room.

Before 8 o'clock Mrs. McQuinn passing along the hall was attracted by a strange noise in Diver's room and opened the door. One glance satisfied her. She closed the door, ran down stairs and sent a man up to see what was the matter. He found Diver lying on the floor naked. He had twisted a sheet into a rope whose ends were fastened to the top of the bedstead. The middle portion of the sheet was bound tightly about the throat and his face was black with strangulation. The ends of the sheet were loosened and medical assistance was hastily summoned. Diver was quickly restored and put to bed. Mrs. McQuinn soon after entered the room and judging by his twitching muscles that he had made another attempt at suicide she asked him if he had taken poison. With a howl he sprang from the bed and rushed toward her. She made her escape from the room and ran to the rear end of the hall, while Diver ran down the front stairway to the street, as has already been described.

A letter was sent yesterday to Mr. Pagnengray, making inquiry concerning his connections. It is reported that he has relatives living at Los Angeles.

OWNEY IN TOWN.

The Traveling Dog Arrives in Phoenix.

As there is the king of tramps among that comical class of men known as the "Hobo," so there is an animal of like distinction among the dogs. This canine traveler's name is "Owney" and he arrived in Phoenix yesterday. He came direct through from Los Angeles, and there is a bench show there now and it is presumed that Owney took it in and inspected the dogs on exhibition and came away disgusted.

Owney is the best known dog in the best known dog in the United States and enjoys the reputation of being the greatest bummer on the continent. He makes periodical trips across the country from the east, always riding on the mail car and enjoying the freedom of getting off when and where he pleases, and continuing his trip again without molestation or danger of being troubled with the disagreeable duty of having to pay fare. His collar, like the breast of a pugilist, is hung with tags, showing through whose hands he has passed en route, and thus he is kept track of in much the same way as a registered package. Owney will probably remain in Phoenix for some days before taking his departure for the City of Mexico.

Preaching by Clark Braden, in the Christian church, Sunday, April 23rd. Subjects: Morning, "The Church and Its Work." Evening, "What is Religion?"
